Center for Architecture, Urbanism, and Infrastructure
Reporting to: Marshall Brown, Director
Position starting date: September, 2019
Position end date: December, 2019

CAUI seeks applicants for the University Administrative Fellows (UAF) Program. Interested applicants should submit a cover letter and a copy of their resume via email to Marshall Brown at marshall.brown@princeton.edu

Learning Objectives
CAUI is seeking a UAF for the fall 2019-2020 academic year to focus on programming development and execution. The UAF will work closely with the program director, and will contribute to one or more of the following, depending on skillset and interests:

- Managing production of a public program at the 2019 Chicago Architecture Biennial
- Developing and coordinating Urban Agent Boot Camp programs for Princeton faculty and students
- Communications and publicity for CAUI programs
- Updating and management of the CAUI website
- Assist with administration of CAUI Executive Committee meetings

This position will provide an opportunity to apply creative skills while also gaining experience in project management and coordination. It will also allow the UAF to focus on urbanism as a productive cultural practice that gives shape to the human world.

Qualifications
Strong creative, collaborative, communication, and organizational skills. Basic computer skills and web design skills desired.

About CAUI
Established in 2007, the Center for Architecture, Urbanism, and Infrastructure is the School of Architecture’s platform for research in architecture and the city. The Center offers a focused venue for sharing collective research with an emphasis on the physical form of cities and the agency of architecture in the urban context. It enables the School to enhance its teaching, research, and public programs dedicated to urbanism. The primary role of the Center is support for collective research; in addition to ongoing research initiatives, the Center also hosts symposia, conferences, publications, working sessions, and public dialogues.

About Marshall Brown
Marshall Brown is an associate professor and architect scholar whose work engages a broad cultural spectrum. Before arriving at Princeton he was based in Chicago and focused on the future of American architecture and urbanism. Brown received his B.A. from Washington University, St. Louis, and master’s degrees in both architecture and urban design from Harvard University. Among other accomplishments, Brown is a Graham Foundation grantee, a MacDowell Fellow, and exhibited in the U.S. Pavilion at the 2016 Venice Architecture Biennale. His works are in the collections of the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art, Crystal Bridges Museum, and the Museum of Contemporary Photography. As the new director of CAUI he is working to make it a center dedicated to the production of exceptional spaces by supporting innovative teaching, intellectual experiences, and visionary projects.
